Josh Ford, East Tennessee Proud Boy, likes to play fash dress up and take selfies. He thinks he's at war.

Josh goes by Uhuru Poyb Ford on Facebook, as well as his given name. Unsurprisingly, his opsec sucks.

Honestly, why even have a LARP Facebook page if you're just going to reply to people with your real profile Josh Ford, East Tennessee Proud Boy?

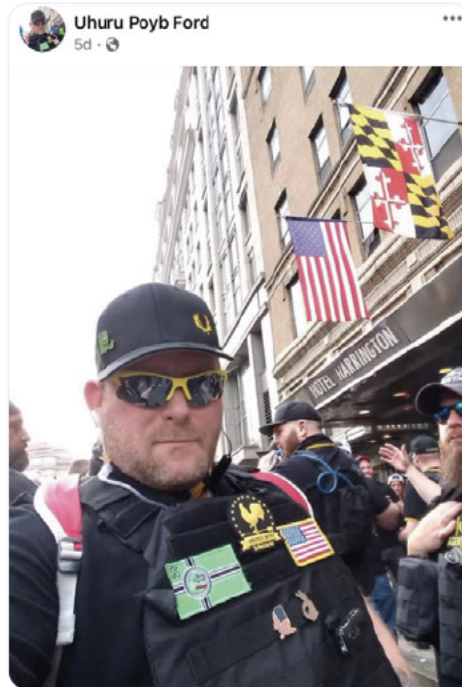

Notice the green frog flag patch Josh Ford is wearing in the photo while he was in DC with the Proud Boys. That is called a "Kekistan" flag and is a favorite way for white nationalists to troll. It matches a German Nazi war flag.

The banner's design, in fact, perfectly mimics a German Nazi war flag, with the Kek logo replacing the swastika and the green replacing the infamous German red. Alt-righters are particularly fond of the way the banner trolls liberals who recognize its origins.

In recent weeks, alt-right marchers at public events planned to create violent scenes with leftist, antifacist counterprotesters and have appeared carrying Kekistan banners. Others have worn patches adorned with the Kek logo.

What the Kek: Explaining the Alt-Right 'Deity' Behind Their 'Meme Magic'

A satirical religion with a frog-headed god has become a favorite new way for white nationalists to troll liberals, while spreading their meme-driven strategy.
